June 23, 1937.

My dear Mr. Davey:-

I am exceedingly sorry that there has been any misunderstanding about the pictures etc. Your letter says that you were sending the dummy in a few days and that is what I have been waiting for feeling sure that it would help get the idea of the details over. Also I understood that you were writing to Mr. Penrose about them.

Everything seemed to be wrong this morning and I had no idea that he would telephone you. I was going to wire you as soon as I got home. He is in a rush because of this big convention coming next month and insists that something be ready. Also he insists on the Rogers bust and a picture of the shrine.

As I see it at the moment, I have suggested getting out a smaller addition, as he wants it right away, and later do it over and do it right.

The prints will be finished to-morrow and I will send you your four sets right away. Later after this convention is over, I will show him one or two color pictures and see what we can do.

I am so sorry that I misunderstood in any way, but I do not think that any thing else could be done right now.

With best wishes,
Sincerely yours,
