Dear Miss Gilpin:

I am sending you tonight the brief Cowles and Hutchinson genealogies and the wording of the John Cowles memorial. Please note the apparent error in the last, which I have marked.

Also, I am sending you a sample of the type style. I prefer the smaller type in the body of articles, and the three columns, as this form makes the articles occupy less space and at the same time they are very easily read.

Where articles go on the same page with photographs, most of them will not run over onto another page if you push the photograph toward the top of the page.

I shall send you the first 47 pages of the text tomorrow -- as corrected and added to -- for volume I. This should give you considerable work for the printer, when those longer articles which I have already sent you are considered. Those longer articles will, of course, follow the pictures of the people described. Where possible, they should, I think, start underneath the photograph.

Dear Miss Gilpin:

You will recall that a client of yours had a sample of Rives paper tested and reported the finding of five percent sulphite. We are enclosing a copy of a letter received from the Rives Mill in France, in reply to our letter advising them of this test.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sirs,

We thank you for your letter No. 97 of March 30th.

We are very much astonished to read that the Chemical Analysis report of the Testing Co. shows 95% rags and 5% sulphite.

Your papers are always made pure rag and no change in the formulas has been made. Besides that it is obvious that the introduction of 5% sulphite would not be of the slightest interest for the maker.

We analysed our reference sheets and found them 100% rags. We would be very glad if you could send us pieces of the sheets you had analysed as we wish very much to clear up the question and cannot see the reason why sulphite could be found in the paper. Should small particles of sulphite escape the careful washing of the pipes and strainers they might give traces of sulphite just at the beginning of a making but certainly not a percentage.

With best regards, we remain

Yours faithfully,

Dear Sirs,

We thank you for your letter No. 87 of March 30th.

We are very much astonished to read that the Chemical Analysis report of the Testing Co. shows 95% rays and 5% sulphite.

Your papers are always made pure ray and no change in the formulae has been made. Besides that it is obvious that the introduction of 5% sulphite would not be of the slightest interest for the market.

We analysed our reference sheets and found them 100% rays. We would be very glad if you could send us pieces of the sheets you had analysed as we wish very much to clear up the question and cannot see the reason why sulphite could be found in the paper. Should small particles of sulphite escape the careful washing of the pipes and strippers they might give traces of sulphite just at the beginning of a making but certainly not a percentage.

With best regards, we remain

Yours faithfully,
