New York City.

Dear Mr. Brown:-

Your letter arrived before the proofs this morning. It seems that there have been some very bad storms in the middle west, and the proofs finally arrived by train from Texas. I shall go over them very carefully this afternoon myself, have my typist do the same this evening, and then I have arranged with an excellent proof reader to go over them to-morrow morning, one who has never seen the manuscript. It will go off to you to-morrow afternoon air mail weather permitting, otherwise by special delivery parcel post.

When I see how many misspelled words got by me in the original, I don't trust myself very far. However, at first glance it looks like good clean proof, and I trust there will be few of any corrections and few changes.

I presume that the rest of the proofs will be along in a day or two. Will I see blue prints in connection with the page proofs to check picture placement?

Assuring you that I am,

Very truly yours,
J. Edgar Hoover
