Dear Sirs:-

I have received your envelope containing the American Institute coupons, which I am returning herewith. This order was canceled both by letter and by telephone following the misleading proposition of your salesman in this vicinity who proposed a $15. a year payment for a period of ten years. Someone in your office telephoned me regarding this immediately following my first letter and she assured me that my check would be returned. Will you kindly let me know if this is to be done? Should you send any books I shall have to return them as I cannot possibly afford to purchase this set on a monthly basis at this time. Perhaps next year I shall be able to do so. When your salesman was here, we were interrupted by a caller and the matter was too hurriedly pressed. I regret that I did not refuse to make any commitment then, but I had been given this information on the long term payment which I presumed could be consummated. I am interested for a future time, but right now I simply cannot do it, even if I must forfeit this first payment. However, I cannot think it to your interest, to ~~regulate~~ that.

Very truly yours,
