Dear Doug:

I have just talked with Laura Gilpin about the monograph on her work for which I am to prepare a text.

As you will recall, we talked about this a few weeks ago and I had indicated that I do need to know the content of the book before I could do any really intelligent writing. While Laura was on the phone I asked her what the pictures were and she said she did not know, she had sent 161 photographs to you but had no idea what had been selected.

In the interests of getting on with the text before I become too bogged down in other things, could I have a set of proofs, or failing that, simply Xerox copies of the photographs so I know what I am looking at? I know her work well enough so that I would not have to have the originals. This does have a sense of urgency, because I am leaving Fort Worth on August 20 and will be gone for the autumn.

Yours,

Mitchell A. Wilder
