Dear Laura,

I went to Imogen's picnic and there was a good crowd there and I understand they came and went all day. Two TV stations covered though I didn't see the results.. the only formal program being belly dancing.

However it turned out to be an expensive picnic for me. I left Richard with the gallery and when I returned found that someone had walked off with the cash box which is causing endless complications!

Forgot to mention in my note with the request for the two silver prints: San Idelfonse Potters, 1925 and Ranchos de Taos Church, 1930 if it would be possible to sign them both twice..once on the outside of the mat and again inside. The buyer said he felt the inside signature was most important for if something happened to the outside mat he would lose the signature. And I forgot to ask you about this.

Best,

Helan

Imogen Cunningham

Friends and admirers of San Francisco's late great photographer, Imogen Cunningham, will "celebrate the long and extraordinary life of Imogen" in Golden Gate Park on Saturday.

Participants in the celebration, to be held from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. in the park's Speedway Meadows, should bring their own picnic lunches, musical instruments, cameras and Frisbees.

Imogen Cunningham, one of the world's most distinguished photographers, died here June 24 at the age of 93.
