

it leaves on those who come to know it, is broad and ever widening. I can remember some places still with recall I find rare for other things.
Sask Dinesen wrote she could remember camping places and tracks in the grass like the faces of friends. I feel that way about De Chelly.

With abiding affection

My dear Laura,

Even with all the hustle of the upcoming wedding, I wanted to write you this brief note to tell you the photographs of De Chelly brought many glad memories to surface again.

I am so pleased we have shared the Navajo. I know you have many, many fond memories of times there with Miss Betsey - as I have with dear Robert. The Navajo, and particularly De Chelly, is a place to cherish - it abounds in the intimate, the sheer - and sometimes stark - beauty of quiet places and yet the imprint
