Dear Wally:-

In looking over the page proofs for the approximately 100th time, I suddenly find two and half lines out of place. I can't imagine how I missed it before. It is doubtless much too late to place them where they belong, but on the possible chance I hasten to send you word.

Bottom of page 132. last 2½ lines belong at the beginning of the Coronado story. Page 133 puts the caption for the "drought takes its toll" in between which breaks all continuity. It may be that the Coronado story is too long and this was the only solution, but in my paste up dunny I have those 2½ lines now on page 132 following the caption beneath the horse pic. This pushes all the Coronado material along, but it all works over onto page 136. If it is too late, which it doubtless is, it could be worse, but the misplacing, breaks the nice continuity we have been able to hold throughout. It is my fault for not catching it, I know.

I hear from Colorado Springs that Edith Farnsworth has invitations out for her affair October 17th. That begins to be very near. Dallas is very busy, but nothing really definite yet.

Hope all goes well,

I have just received Mary's letter and am distressed that Katie has been so ill. You must have been very distraught. I do hope that she is really well again and that all goes smoothly.
