Dear Mrs. Dorr:

Yes, of course you may use the quote: "I know of nothing more pitiable than the spectacle of modern man, who for having sought his center in himself, ends up, in the words of Hermann Hesse, like a wolf howling in despair toward eternity."

John has spoken to me of you, with the deepest affection, an affection now fully shared by me and deepened in view of your magnificent book, THE BARE FEET, for which I thank you with all my heart.

Yours devotedly,

Jacques Maritain
