

4. That seems to touch all of me.
Her eyes are a deep, deep blue and they charm us with their quiety.
And, Nell, I need not add that she is a good baby — she is love's child, your very own. Ours.

She answers your special letter with a knowing, swift smile and extends a tiny fist upward in a stretch that accompanies a trickle of laughter. She is already thinking of the day we shall be together again, under the tree with the bells in your garden. She is so very fortunate to have you and I think she must know it.

My heart says all the things this letter cannot hold. We are thinking of you, of "Pater"; of "Barefeet" and wishing well in love.

Our dear, dear Nell,

Our letters crossed and since then I hope the way is smoother for you. How pained I feel to think that you are not well — that "Pater" has been ill also.

I feel helpless but send prayers and more than constant love so full is the cup that comes to you. No people mean more to us in deep love and devotion.
We wish that we could "do" more than "say" things. But we are always near in thought and spirit. Take all we can give of supporting love to carry home with you.

Our glimmer of a trip never

3. on another health. we are pleased to have found a redwood cottage (tho' we shall only live in part of it) with a quiet, shaded garden and a wood-paneled simple living room wth fireplace. we shall make it look like us soon. we are collecting a few old things to paint and polish and in a stern simplicity we'll begin. I rather like the idea. And, Nele, we finally have found a second-hand enlarger which will meet us in our new house. If I am worthy I shall tell you of us more vividly than ^{my} words do. In the meantime I will send tiny windows that open into our house and ask you to come in.

Anne fills my heart more full of love each day. She talks more sweetly and looks more thoroughly and smiles broadly. Her hands express her mood. they grasp my finger and enclose it with a warmth

2. moved beyond a faint light and it is just as wele. Perhaps we can aim for late October (tho' it will be hard for Mitch to leave his studies then) or Christmas. There are a web of pulls to make us come not the least of which is a Baptism. And, when we do come we must present Anne to Mr. Mitchell who wants to see his first great-grandchild so much that he only delicately hints in his letters about a possible visit.

We are at present in the upheaval of moving - just to another street of Berkeley - to 2529 Hillegass St. I think that we will be tucked into our new home by the 10th of September, if all goes wele. It is easier to think of leaving here now that curtains are down and our eyes are focused
