My dear Mrs. Dorr:

It was wonderful seeing you again today and being able to catch up with your own progress on the book.

We both agreed that you have accomplished a magnificent job of creative work with what you have just shown us. Of course there will be material from your earlier visit that can be nicely used. But the whole book now has so much more authority and power.

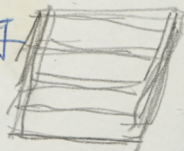

We are returning your manuscript and two copies of the text. We are very definitely interested in the book and we believe we will be able to work along with you in some fashion that will be permanent and helpful. More about this, however, when the dummy gets farther along and we can become somewhat more precise about the crucial matters of cost of manufacture and sales potential.

Meanwhile, with very best regards and good luck to you in the work of now creating a book out of all your material.

Sincerely,

Burton Cumming
