Dear Nell:

A couple of things, wildly unrelated except for the common subject matter.

1. I enclose the bill from Convente for printing the book. I have checked it over, and as far as I can see, it is accurate. The 250 extra copies is any printer's prerogative. This is the 5% "over or under clause" under which they work. The other items fit the revised specifications after the book got underway. Altogether, the $15,292.00 checks out here.

2. Do you want to pay this direct now that the book is finished, or do you still prefer us to send him money? If this is the case, let me know, and I'll send you a bill on our letterhead for this amount, itemized for the production and printing of THE BARE FEET, etc., etc. with the total amount. You can then send us this amount, which we'll put through our books and pay Convente.

3. The other item is the nice quote from Steichen, which is perfect for our use in promotion. You will see it appearing in the ads in due course.

We're hoping for books about the middle of November, and distribution commences then.

My trip to Washington had to be delayed because of a production crisis here, but I am going down on Wednesday, the 7th, and I hope you will keep your fingers crossed for me.

Let me know your list of special people which we can add to our own list for promotion and review copies.

So much for now. The rest, I guess, is up to us to produce the sales, and I hope we get very active very soon.

Let me once more congratulate you on a perfectly splendid piece of work, all the way through, and under considerable strain and frustration. You have certainly triumphed over both the human obstacles and the artistic ones.

With very best wishes for the success you deserve, I am, as ever

Sincerely yours,

Burton Cumming
