My dear Miss Sipprell:

"The Prophet" which you, Mr. and Mrs. Cekic have sent for Dick's Library, I find on my desk today after returning from a short business trip. The book itself is a beautiful addition to the library. The picture of Miss Gilmore and little Nina adds another bit of sentiment and history to Dick's House and I shall tell the story in what I say on the following fly leaf.

I like to think of what a thrill Nina will get out of it when as a young girl she is attending a Dartmouth Carnival or visiting Hanover and looking through the library in Dick's House.

The inscription on the fly leaf is simply perfect and touched us deeply. Inscriptions like these make the books more than mere books. They become the living carriers of messages of friendliness and good will - and these messages year after year will continue to help make Dick's House what President Hopkins called it when the cornerstone was laid - "a house of cheer and friendly helpfulness".

And now what can I say to express the depth of our appreciation for what you have done to help Dick carry on in the college that was so dear to him. We thank you from the bottom of our hearts and the boys will bless the names of our friends and Dick's for years to come.

Sincerely yours,

C. D. Hall
