Antarctica, one of the world's last major wildernesses, is the subject of an emotional publication urging governments to designate it a world park.

Let's Save Antarctica (Greenhouse Publications, $5.95) by American lawyer James Barnes is little more than a fundraiser and petition for the Antarctica and Southern Ocean Coalition.

Its objectives are to protect Antarctica from mineral and oil exploration, preserve endangered species and to pressure Governments to implement an ecosystem plan in Antarctica.

The author claims it is a handbook to help concerned people retain Antarctica and stresses the region must become a global reserve which would prohibit all mineral and oil exploration.

Outstanding photographs by Elliot Porter add charm to the book and say much more than all the words.

Let's Save Antarctica is available from Axiom Books, 110 Rundle St, Kent Town.
