Purposes and Aims

Game Conservation International is an organization of hunters and fishermen dedicated to the protection, conservation and utilization of the wildlife and mariculture of the world.

The world's wildlife is a valuable natural resource which must be managed with skill and foresight if it is to be conserved for future generations. Under the extreme pressure from a rapidly expanding human population, squeezed by increased agricultural use of the land, and harried by human intrusion into once remote game ranges, much of the wildlife of the world is in grave jeopardy. Particularly acute is the plight of wildlife in developing areas of the world where population growth is most rapid, game management programs unsophisticated, and the local governments unaware of the value of wildlife as a renewable resource if properly exploited for its commercial value, sport hunting, and food. A combination of these factors has caused the lamentable disappearance of many species and others are now imperiled.

Game Conservation International is determined to conserve the world's wildlife heritage by rescuing species in danger, by building effective game management programs where needed, educating world leaders to the value of wildlife, acting as a spokesman for the hunting fraternity, and serving as a forum for the exchange of hunting and conservation news.

Founded in 1968, Game Conservation International is a non-profit organization operating under the provisions of Section 501 (c) (3) of the Revenue Code of the United States, which allows contributions to be tax deductible to the fullest extent of the law. Contributions received, as well as other funds raised, are devoted to a variety of wildlife management and game conservation projects worldwide.
