Dear Stuart,

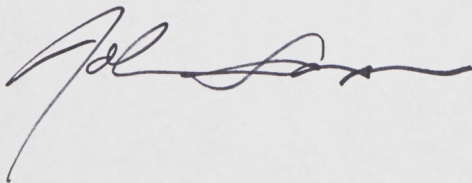

Enclosed is a photo from "WARHUNT"; a copy of the video will follow separately. I hope it's a good copy and that you find it as interesting as you did before.

The book I mentioned (while we talked about sacrifice etc..in the aztec cultures) is 'VIOLENCE AND THE SACRED', by RENE GIRARD. I found it interesting, but think he too misses the mark.

My feeling is that the ephemeral, and vaporish perception of the existence of our parents in very early life is what becomes our concept of 'god'. And that the fear that they may envy our more comfortable existence, and the consequence of this is some form of 'sacrifice' to ward this fear away.

I thank you now again after seeing your wonderful reproductions of birds, which you gifted me.

Best,
