Dear Stuart,

Thanks for sending me the box--it looks very professional. And thanks again for the praise on the work done so far.

I haven't talked to you about my bill because I know what is going on with Craig, but prompt response to my invoices is essential if you want your December deadline to be met. You are going to have over $140,000 in bills coming from me in the next couple of months and it doesn't give me confidence nor inspiration when you cannot pay the first of several invoices. I have another shipment of 11 prints that are ready to be delivered, and I need to deliver them and invoice them so that I can keep a cash flow. A thousand dollars here and there isn't going to solve the problem, and it annoys me that you are not prepared to handle such an important part of your project so close to completion time and with such a long time to prepare yourself. I do not have the resources to carry your responsibilities. If I don't pay the separator soon, that may cause problems. I still owe $25,000 for equipment, etc., etc.

Please call or write so that we can discuss the problem. I have no doubts about your willingness to pay--I just need to know more about your financial schedule and how it will influence the printing phase of your book.

Sincerely,

David
